

GFV Training — UX Review

Page / Area	What's there now	Potential issue	Possible improvement
Entry / Login	When entering GFV Training, the first page mainly shows the logo.	As a new user, it's not immediately clear what GFV Training is, whether something is still loading, or what the next step is. Login also felt a little complicated on my first try.	Add a short explanation + clear CTA such as: "Train smarter with programs, coaches, gyms and recovery support." Then clearly show Login / Sign up / Open app.
Overall Design	Black / gold visual style.	—	I really like this. It feels calm, premium and powerful and fits the training theme very well.
Home – Program Cards	Large program cards in horizontal sliders.	Because of the card size, part of the next card is visible and you have to slide quite often.	Slightly reduce the card/container size so that full cards fit more naturally on desktop.
Home – Visual Representation	Muay Thai programs mainly show Asian-looking male fighters.	Female users or other target groups may not immediately see themselves represented.	Use a more diverse mix of men/women, different levels and possibly different ages.
Home – User Guidance	Different programs are shown directly.	I see many options, but I don't immediately know which one is right for me.	Add a short orientation: Where are you now? What is your goal? Beginner / Technique / Fitness / Fighting / Recovery? Then guide users toward the right program.
Home – Muay Thai Explanation	Programs are shown, but there is little explanation before them.	A new user may not know what Muay Thai actually is, what equipment is needed or what benefits it offers.	Add a very short intro: What is Muay Thai? What do I need? What can it improve? Just enough to create interest.
Gyms	Gym cards with image, name and location. Search + filters are available.	The cards themselves look good, but the page feels visually busy and the purpose is not immediately obvious.	Add a clear headline and benefit, e.g. "Find the right gym near you." Explain briefly what the user can do here.
Coaches	Coaches from many different cities with image, price and location.	It's difficult to build trust or connection from only a name, photo and price. The different photo styles also feel inconsistent.	Add a short coach intro: specialty, experience, training focus. Consider a map view for location-based discovery and use a more consistent photo style.
Physical Therapists	Therapist profiles look similar to coach profiles.	Some photos appear again from the Coaches section but with different names. This immediately makes the profiles feel fictional and can damage trust — especially with $70–100/hr services.	Avoid reusing the same person/photo under different names. If these are demo profiles, clearly label them as demo data. Real providers should ideally use real photos, qualifications and profile information.
Exercises	Muscle-group exercise library.	Images took a very long time to load on my test — roughly 15+ seconds. Until then, the page looked almost empty.	Check image size, compression, loading strategy and performance.
You / Account	Subscription, memberships, account, provider, legal settings.	The structure itself looks clear, but "You" currently feels mostly like account administration.	Later, this could become more personal with My Programs, My Goals, Progress, Saved Coaches, Training History, etc.
